Communication skills

- teaching skills: I have worked as a teaching assistant at university level courses for around 4 years. Thanks to this, I've developed good communication skills, in particular I can summarize, make concrete explanations of complex subjects to inexperienced audiences.
- team work: during my PhD and postdoc, I've worked in close collaboration with my research group and other teams across the world. Furthermore, as a pymc developer, I've improved my ability to work remotely and communicate with a spatially segregated team.
- mediating skills: I have worked in the field of neuroscience during my PhD and postdoc. The field is very diverse and I have specialized in the computational, mathematical and statistical side of the work, but I must always be able to communicate well with experts of other subjects like biology, physiology and animal behavior. Thanks to this, I have gained a lot of training in communicating complicated subjects in simple terms.
- intercultural skills: I've worked in Argentina and Italy, I've also lived in the United States, and have traveled for work to Spain, France and Germany. I am used to be and work in international and multicultural environments, and I strongly appreciate cultural diversity.

Organisational / managerial skills

- I have organized discussions and internal seminars at my research groups during both my PhD and postdoc.
- As part of the PHD4PMI initiative with INNOVA S.p.A., I was the contact person between my work group and the company. I coordinated my team's efforts to meet INNOVA's goals.
- As part of my duties as postdoc, I have contributed to writing research grant applications.
- I know SCRUM for agile software development.
